YOU WILL MEET A TALL DARK STRANGER

Woody Allen's "You Will Meet a Tall Dark Stranger" follows a pair of married couples, Alfie (Anthony Hopkins) and Helena (Gemma Jones), and their daughter Sally (Naomi Watts) and husband Roy (Josh Brolin), as their passions, ambitions, and anxieties lead them into trouble and out of their minds.

After Alfie leaves Helena to pursue his lost youth and a free-spirited call girl named Charmaine (Lucy Punch), Helena abandons rationality and surrenders her life to the loopy advice of a charlatan fortune teller.

Unhappy in her marriage, Sally develops a crush on her handsome art gallery owner boss, Greg (Antonio Banderas), while Roy, a novelist nervously awaiting the response to his latest manuscript, becomes moonstruck over Dia (Freida Pinto), a mystery woman who catches his gaze through a nearby window.

Despite these characters' attempts to dodge their problems with pipe dreams and impracticable plans, their efforts lead only to heartache, irrationality, and perilous hot water.

Taking its title from the prediction fortune tellers use to beguile their marks, "You Will Meet a Tall Dark Stranger," illustrates with wry humor how easy it is for our illusions to make fools of us all.

Synopsis

One night, Alfie (Anthony Hopkins) wakes up with a sudden wave of panic over thoughts of mortality. Abandoning Helena (Gemma Jones), his wife of forty years, Alfie sets out to relive the pleasures of his youth. Devastated, Helena tries to kill herself, and then, finding no consolation from medicine and therapy, seeks out the help of a fortune teller, Cristal (Pauline Collins). Before long, Helena finds the tranquility she seeks by surrendering all her thoughts and actions to Cristal's guidance.

Helena's daughter Sally (Naomi Watts) encourages her mother's pacifying visits to the charlatan fortune teller, as she is weary of dealing with her mother's trauma, and has marital problems of her own. Her novelist husband Roy (Josh Brolin) is unable to hold a paying job and the couple live off of Helena's support and Sally's earnings as an assistant to a prominent gallery owner, Greg Clemente (Antonio Banderas). Years ago, Roy produced an acclaimed first novel, but his subsequent books haven't lived up to his initial promise. Roy's fears that he may be a flash in the pan make him hard to live with and they clash over Sally's desire to have a child.

Years pass, and as Roy struggles to complete his latest novel, he becomes obsessed with a mysterious young woman in a red dress, who plays her guitar from a nearby window. Just as he is completing his book, a friend, Henry Strangler (Ewen Bremner), gives him the manuscript of his first novel. Roy recognizes that Strangler possesses the literary talent that has always eluded him.

Cristal tells Helena that she will be finding new love with a handsome stranger. Roy, annoyed by Helena's frequent visits, tells her that the dark stranger she will meet is the one everyone eventually meets. Sally accompanies Greg to a jewelry store to help him choose earrings for his wife, a task Sally does and envies Greg's wife, the life she leads with Greg.

While Alfie's pursuit of a second youth proved to be more challenging than he had hoped, one day he announces to Sally and Roy that he has found a woman, fallen in love, and is going to marry her. When Sally and Roy meet Alfie's fiancée, Charmaine (Lucy Punch), they discover her to be decades younger, very attractive, and utterly frivolous. Alfie fails to mention that he met Charmaine when he was paying for her services as a call girl.

To keep Helena occupied, Alfie had previously gotten her a job as a personal shopper for Enid (Celia Imrie) and Peter Wicklow (Jim Piddock). While at the Wicklow home, she meets Peter's uncle Jonathan (Roger Ashton-Griffiths), a recent widower who runs an occult bookshop. While not exactly handsome or tall, Jonathan is at least a stranger, and Helena starts keeping company with him.

As Roy anxiously awaits a response to his manuscript from his editor, Malcolm Dodds (Alex Macqueen), he invites the woman in the window for lunch. Seeing the woman, whose name is Dia (Freida Pinto), at close quarters for the first time, he discovers that she is both breathtakingly beautiful and soon to marry. Roy flirts brazenly with Dia, and she doesn't discourage him.

Sally takes Greg to visit the gallery of a painter friend that she believes in as an artist, Iris (Anna Friel). Greg is impressed with her work and agrees to represent her.

Greg has opera tickets for the evening, and as his wife can't go, he invites Sally to come with him. Afterwards, as Greg drops Sally off, he thanks her for coming with him, listening to his marital woes, and for all the help she gives him at the office. It's clear that Sally is developing a crush on her boss, but his interest in her is hard to gauge.

The passing days bring about impending troubles and disappointments: Alfie is increasingly aware he can't afford the luxuries he is showering on Charmaine; Sally is disheartened to find out that Greg is having an affair with Iris; and worst of all, Roy's book is rejected and he sees his world collapsing. Roy can't imagine living without writing, and he knows that without success he will never be able to support a life with Dia.

Just as Roy seems to have no way out, he hears that that two of his friends have been in an accident—Mike is in a coma and Strangler is dead. Certain that Strangler hasn't shown his book to anyone else, Roy breaks into Strangler's apartment and steals his manuscript.

Won over by Roy's persistent courtship, Dia cancels her marriage shortly before the ceremony, creating uproar in her family and her fiancé Alan's (Neil Jackson) family. With Dia now free and with the acclaim for Strangler's manuscript, Roy gets both the woman of his dreams and the literary success he had always yearned for.

Helena and Jonathan are getting more serious but as he believes in the afterlife, the two of them attempt to secure his dead wife's permission to marry at a séance. Now that Sally has the emotional burden of Roy out of her life, she decides to start up her own gallery with her friend Jane (Fenella Woolgar), and Helena agrees to bankroll her. As she'll no longer be Greg's employee, Sally feels the time is right for her to make her romantic feelings known to him. Finally, after discovering that Charmaine has been cheating, Alfie finally comprehends the calamity his behavior has brought for Helena and for himself, and decides to do something about it.

Just as the characters seem to be drawing towards resolutions of their problems, they learn there are no easy ways out. In fact, amid all their disappointments, it may only have been their fantasies that have kept them going. Through the stories of the characters in "You Will Meet a Tall Dark Stranger" Woody Allen explores the human need to elude life's adversities by nurturing illusions.

About the Production

A fortune teller and her predictions figure prominently in the story of YOU WILL MEET A TALL DARK STRANGER, and so the title has an obvious literal meaning. But it also has a darker connotation, as Josh Brolin's character spells out: "You will meet the same tall, dark stranger that we all eventually meet," in other words, the grim reaper. It is the attempt to evade the inevitable that sets the story into motion, when Alfie Shepridge (Anthony Hopkins) wakes up in the middle of the night, realizes he only has a few years left. "Alfie starts to get antsy," says writer/director Woody Allen, "and wants to start eating health foods, and doesn't want to hear from his wife that he's not a young man anymore. He doesn't want to face up to that, so he gets rid of his wife, Helena (Gemma Jones), and embarks on a different life, catapulting everyone into different states of chaos." Taking on the accoutrements of youth—a sports car, a health club membership, a flashy bachelor pad—Alfie convinces himself he can regain the bloom of his life by sheer willpower. "I think there is something about the male ego that blinds Alfie," says Hopkins. "He literally goes out of his mind."

Shattered after being abandoned by Alfie, Helena (Gemma Jones) grasps at straws. After a failed suicide attempt, she tries medicine and analysis to calm her spirits, but finds no relief until she latches onto the unlikely solution of visiting a fortune teller, Cristal (Pauline Collins). Hearing Cristal's cheerful predictions of her future, especially involving romance, brightens her spirits almost immediately. "Helena is an innocent," says Jones, "she always is optimistic and she still believes there is love out there. She could have picked the other way and become really unhappy, but somehow she travels through it and comes out the other side." Because she is able to delude herself, she survives.

Alfie and Helena's daughter, Sally (Naomi Watts), is also feeling strains in her marriage. Having married her novelist husband Roy (Josh Brolin) when he was at a high point after publishing a promising first novel, his subsequent inability to live up to his promise has rendered him irritable and unable to hold a job. Tired of subsidizing his artistic ambitions with her mother's money and her salary as the assistant to art gallery owner Greg Clemente (Antonio Banderas), Sally is anxious for the two of them to get on with their lives. "Sally's reached an age where she's hellbent on having a baby and can't get Roy on the same track as her," says Watts. "So she becomes fixated on it as women in their late thirties do. She wants to make it work with Roy, but as she can't get him on board, she starts seeking the attention of someone else."

As Roy turns out one failed book after another, it eats into his confidence. "Roy doesn't have sufficient talent to get beyond that first novel," says Allen. "At first he didn't mind trying, but it's starting to occur to him that maybe he's a one book phenomenon, a flash in the pan, and this is a very unpleasant thought." Weighted down by his anxiety, Roy procrastinates, laboring for seven years on his latest manuscript. "I don't think Roy needs to be a writer so much as to be a success, which is a very different thing," says Brolin. "For him it's not about what interests him or inspires him, it's just that he wants to be perceived as brilliant, needs to be perceived as brilliant, because the perception he has of himself is very, very low at this point in his life."

Sally encourages her mother's visits to Cristal, even though she knows the fortune teller is a fraud, and is making Helena increasingly delusional. As an only child whose mother has tried to kill herself, Sally needs to take care of her mother, and it is a very heavy burden. "She's thinks, what the hell, nothing else has worked and this guru is keeping her calm, keeping her from being suicidal," says Allen. "She doesn't want to upset the apple cart and have her mother take sleeping pills again or be distraught all the time." Jones thinks that Helena's personality made her especially susceptible to Cristal's chicanery: "I think she is a bit flakey. I think we all get a bit nuts as we get older, or our characteristics become eccentricities. Helena probably was a flighty girl and hasn't really grown up in some senses." Helena grew up religious but it failed her.

Taking his own side-trip from reality, Alfie falls head over heels for Charmaine (Lucy Punch), a capricious call girl half his age. "He makes a complete idiot of himself for this woman because she is glamorous and invigorates his self-esteem or what little self esteem he has," says Hopkins. As inappropriate for Alfie as Charmaine is, it's not hard to see how she could, in Roy's words, "put a charge in his batteries." "Charmaine is someone who always wants to have a good time, to be laughing, dancing, up for life and whatever's going on," says Punch. "She's almost like a bird, she never lands, fluttering from one thing to the next. She is also very sensual and sexual, led by her loins." His head spinning from Charmaine's company, Archie proposes to her, disregarding her taste for luxurious items he can't afford. "He thinks, 'Oh, I might as well marry the girl—I love her,'" says Hopkins. "The girl has reestablished his manhood and youth and he just wants to go all out and try to extend things." And Charmaine says yes. "I definitely think she's fond of him, although I'm not sure if she's in love with him," says Punch. "Definitely the fact that he had money was attractive; although I'm sure she had many wealthy suitors before. I think it was on a whim—I don't think she gave it a lot of thought. I don't think she ever had it in her mind that it was forever, nor does she ever think about the consequences of any of her actions."

Frustrated in her relationship with Roy, Sally finds herself increasingly drawn to her boss. In every way, Greg is the polar opposite of her husband: successful instead of struggling; calm instead of moody; capable to provide the kind of life she's yearning for—gifts, travel, trips to the opera, maybe even a child. "I think she wants to make it with Roy," says Watts, "but there is a massive hole for her that isn't being fulfilled. Greg represents all the surface things she thinks she's looking for." As she starts to fall for Greg, it's hard for her to tell if he returns her feelings. Although he usually treats her in a strictly professional manner, he sometimes sends out ambiguous signals. For example, he takes her to a jewelry store and has her try on earrings to help him select a pair for his wife. "He looks at her, measures her, and makes this move that may just destroy her heart if she has a crush on him," says Banderas. "It's innocent for him, but for her it means something. I think he is a little bit blind and doesn't know the effect he can produce on her by doing certain things." And for her part, Sally is waiting for him to make the first move. "She's reserved and wants to know that she's wanted before she's willing to put herself out on the line, as for example in a charged scene where they sit in a car after going to the opera and drinks together. "She thinks he's thinking about her, but they are out of sync, and it is really awkward," says Watts. "I think that Greg may be thinking, 'Wow! She's prettier than I thought!'" says Banderas. "Now that he's looking at her in a different context she's quite interesting, and that comes as a surprise to him. But it doesn't go anywhere."

Stressing out in his room, straining to finish his novel, Roy becomes transfixed by a mysterious woman dressed in red who plays her guitar in the window across his courtyard. “He’s having a tough time,” says Allen, “and when he sees this breath of fresh air across the yard, he becomes intrigued with her and eventually she becomes a seductive fantasy for him.” Roy is by nature a “grass is always greener on the other side” type of person, perpetually dissatisfied with what he has, and drawn to what is beyond his reach; he becomes even more interested in the woman when he discovers that she’s involved with another man. “Roy feels lost,” says Brolin, “and when he hears her playing her guitar, and sees the youth and beauty that she represents, he thinks that by attaining that, suddenly he can start over, or he can pretend like everything that’s happened that’s been painful in his past can be erased by creating something new.”

Ultimately, Josh takes the plunge and invites the woman, whose name is Dia (Freida Pinto, star of SLUMDOG MILLIONAIRE), for lunch. While Dia is engaged to be married, she accepts his invitation. “I don’t think that Dia went out with Roy with the intention of having an affair, but just for the prospect of meeting someone new and having a conversation,” says Pinto. “But she is a confused girl, trying to figure out what she wants in life, and when he gives her such flattering compliments, she is definitely lured into wanting to know what might be. And somehow she realizes that what she has is not what she wants.” She also has fantasies of being a writer.

While the characters in YOU WILL MEET A TALL DARK STRANGER don’t manage their problems in the most productive ways, Roy crosses a line that the others don’t. “Roy is the darkest, most complicated character,” says Allen. “He’s dissatisfied with himself, he’s insecure, his relationship with Sally is deteriorating and he’s drawn to Dia, so he’s willing to make a bad moral choice, in the hopes that it will straighten his life out in some way.” Brolin doesn’t think that Roy struggled very hard with his decision. “I don’t think there was even a second thought that went into it,” he says. “‘I can use this for me, he’s dead, so why not?’ Which is why I think the consequences are so severe.”

As is often the case with Woody Allen’s movies, YOU WILL MEET A TALL DARK STRANGER features a cast of prestigious and well-known actors as well as some talented newcomers. “It always surprises me how good they can be,” says Allen. “I don’t give them any rehearsal. Most of them ask me no questions about the character or about the script. They just come in and do it, sometimes on the first take or two, and then we move on.” In fact, Allen hadn’t even met Naomi Watts before she arrived on the set, and her first scene was one of the most emotional ones she had to play in the movie. “She came in that morning, said ‘Hello,’ and I said ‘Hello,’ and she started acting like a car that starts in third, without bothering to go to first or second,” says Allen. “She was great from the moment she opened her mouth. I’d never seen anything like it before: she walks in cold, and instantly calls upon her acting talent and does it great straightaway.” Watts remembers it slightly differently: “It was pretty nerve-wracking—and I was totally starstruck by Woody!”

Allen has high praise for Anthony Hopkins: “He brings a lifetime of superior acting: he can just walk in and show up on screen and automatically he just has something that’s built in. He’s such a forceful and tremendous actor that you just get overwhelmed by him all the time. He’s one of those people who’s lucky in life, he just has it.” Hopkins said that Allen gave him a lot of confidence: “I felt like he trusted me for what I can do. He didn’t over-direct me. At the same time, he didn’t let me get away with anything. He’s very demanding and he wanted the best out of me and that’s just great. And he was very upbeat when I got it right!”

When Allen was casting the role of Helena, Gemma Jones’ name kept coming up. “When I described the character, everyone said to me, ‘you mean Gemma Jones,’” he says. “We looked at many people for the role, and not only is she a wonderful actress, she just seemed a natural for this part, a part that really fit her like a glove.” Says Jones: “It was quite tricky to see how to play Helena. I had to play her ‘for real,’ as it were, and not be seduced into taking it into farce, although the situations are fairly farcical. And we had quite a problem deciding how she should look. And then Woody said, ‘think out of date clothes and hats,’ and it all sort of fitted into place, the costume and the sensibility of someone who is fragile. And that’s what I hung my performance on.” Allen has the highest praise for Jones’s work. “She came in and knew the character and what to do, and performed it immaculately, as beautifully as any author could want one of his characters played.”

Compared to the other actors, Josh Brolin had numerous ideas and questions for Allen. “The thought of playing any character that’s anywhere ‘normal,’ whatever that is, always frightens me,” says Brolin. “So my suggestion to Woody at the beginning was that Roy be in a wheelchair. I wrote him a three page email about why I thought it was necessary, and I think I mentioned a Yugoslavian accent at one point. And he wrote me back an email response that just said ‘no.’ I laughed a lot—I’m still laughing. That was the beginning of our friendship.” Says Allen: “Some actors have no questions, Josh has many, he really gets into it—he asked me about his haircut, how he should walk, dress, conduct himself, and that’s great, it works for him. I could only make one or two little suggestions here and there, but his answers were always better than mine. He thinks it emerged from a dialogue with me, but it’s really him. What I did keep telling him was, ‘you’re a great actor, use your instinct, just trust it and it will make you great again.’”

The role of Greg Clemente was a departure from the kind of roles Antonio Banderas normally plays. “Normally, especially in America, I have been called to play characters that are bigger than life, heroic characters in epic movies like ZORRO and DESPERADO. I never play just a sweet, normal, well intentioned person. It’s kind of new for me, actually.” But the heartthrob quality that Banderas displayed in those epic parts made him ideal for this quieter kind of role. Says Allen: “I needed someone who would be believable as an international art dealer, that was successful, and Antonio had everything I wanted—the stature, the elegance, the good looks that would make a woman fall for him, and he’s a wonderful actor.” While Greg might seem the one character in the film with his feet planted firmly on the ground, he also has some issues, albeit more subtle ones. “He married a woman who was bipolar, not a good choice, and he’s had a tough time with her, and he’s switched over now to a woman who has had a problem with dope and alcohol,” says Allen. “He’d probably be better off with Sally, but instead he picks her friend who has not had such a completely healthy past.”

While Allen provided Banderas with a copy of the script when he arrived on location, he chose to not read anything except for the scenes he was in. “I asked Woody if he wanted me to read it and he said it was up to me. If I didn’t want to read it, I could do my part independently of what the story is all about, and everyone is just playing their parts. Because it was my first time with Woody and it was a different experience than I had ever had before, I decided not to.”

As Dia is an enigmatic figure for Roy, a screen upon which he projects his fantasies, Allen doesn’t let the audience get a good look at her until Roy does. For the first half of the film; she’s visible only from a distance, through the window. “When you finally do see her, it bowls you over—she is so remarkably beautiful,” says Allen. “She’s probably had a more complex life because of her unusual beauty.” Pinto found it liberating to play such a mysterious character. “It allows you to have more freedom,” she says. “Not many people will question you, saying, ‘you shouldn’t have done that, it’s out of character.’ Still it was a bit of a challenge, as it was only my third film, and here I was working with Woody and Josh. Everyone was so encouraging, though, and I got over it in a few days.”

As the original name of her character was the same as her character in SLUMDOG MILLIONAIRE, Pinto asked Allen if he would change her character’s name. When she felt the second name he picked wasn’t appropriate for her character’s class, she asked if she could choose a name herself, and he was happy to oblige her. Pinto spent a few days thinking about it. “It may not seem that important, but I felt like she needed a name that felt like the character,” she says. “Dia didn’t come to me easily, I had to think about it. It means ‘day’ in Spanish and Portuguese, and in Hindi it means ‘light,’ both having to do with lightness.”

The final character to be cast was Lucy Punch as Charmaine. “We looked for a long time, and went through every conceivable permutation, known and unknown, but in the end, Lucy won this part by sheer talent,” says Allen. “She has a great look, she’s very funny, she’s a wonderful actress, has a tremendous personality, and she’s 100% alive on the screen.” Says Punch: “I only read a couple of the scenes in my first audition, but when I came back to do more, I don’t know why, I just felt like I knew her, just thought I knew how to do it. I decided that anything that Charmaine said about herself was probably untrue, or she made it up on the spot. She just keeps reinventing herself and changing her story. There’s a lot that’s unlikeable in her, but I really connected with her love of life and fun and her vivaciousness.” Punch calls the day she got the role the most exciting day of her life. “I was screaming, running around the house. I rang up my mother, everyone was screaming. Then a half hour later, I locked myself out of my apartment.”

Banderas says that before he came to location, he got a letter from Allen (which he has now framed) telling him that he could feel free to change dialogue if it made him more comfortable, including dropping or adding lines. All the actors mention Allen’s receptiveness to improvisation. “Charmaine speaks in a certain type of way and Woody let me improvise a lot, and let me try different lines and different jokes,” says Punch. “A couple of times he would say, ‘stop being funny.’ He likes things to be very real and I guess I was doing something a little contrived. But generally he let me do what I wanted.” Says Pinto: “The advice he gave me was to not act for the camera. He detests actors acting for the camera—he wants you to be more natural.” Allen’s style of shooting scenes in one long take was both exciting and challenging for the actors. “You could be doing a six-page scene,” says Brolin, “and you walk in and figure out the blocking in about ten minutes, and you may walk into six different rooms, so the blocking is extremely complicated. You have fifteen minutes to incorporate it into your mind, as they’re setting up the lighting, and he gives you a few takes to do it in, when it’s only one shot.

So you definitely have to be focused and present.” Says Watts: “I always wondered why people end up speaking or sounding like him in his movies,” she says. “A lot of that has to do with the fact that you’re kind of on edge in these scenes. You stumble through your dialogue, like, ‘uh-uh-oh I gotta pick up the glass! Now I’ve gotta go out there and get another drink!’ But that’s what I love about him. He gives you these brilliant words, but he’s not so profoundly tied to them. When you do the scene that way, and you’re searching for words, and you’re making them your own.”

Compared to all the characters in the story, Helena appears the most serene. Living in her happy cloud, she even finds a soul-mate with an equally preposterous disregard for reality. “Helena is crazier than everybody else,” says Allen, “and in this tragic life that we all live, you can find happiness, provided that you’re nuts, if you buy into fairy tale fantasies, and black out reality.” This notion isn’t limited to people as irrational as Helena. “I think everyone finds his own way of denying and rationalizing the awful human predicament, says Allen. “That’s how people get through life: by constantly denying reality, constantly buying into illusions of artistic immortality, of meaning to the universe, an afterlife, all kinds of illusions.” Hopkins feels this idea is exemplified by Alfie’s intense need to have a child that is his own. “He wants someone to carry on and immortalize him or eternalize him,” he says. “Whatever we do to bolster our lives, to ward off the inevitable—fame, fortune, wealth, the red carpets, or whatever it is—is to try to perpetuate immortality, to ward off the horror because that is what we all feel deep down inside: the mystery of life and death.”

The film opens and closes with a line taken from “Macbeth”: “a tale full of sound and fury, signifying nothing.” Allen explains: “All these characters are running around trying to find meaning in their lives, and find ambitions and successes and love. They’re all running around, bumping into each other, hurting each other, getting hurt, making mistakes—a constant chaos. But in the end, after a hundred years, everybody on earth along with them will be completely gone, and after another hundred years, there will be a new set of people. And after all of the ambitions, and aspirations, and the plagiarism and adultery, what once was so meaningful won’t mean a thing. Many years from now the sun burns out and the earth is gone, and many years after that the entire universe is gone. Even if you could find a pill that makes you live forever, that forever is still a finite number, because nothing is forever. It’s all sound and fury, and in the end it means nothing.”

Considering the bleakness of his vision, why does Allen continue to make films?

“It’s a distraction that has its own little challenges and consequently keeps my mind off morbid thoughts.”

About the Cast

(in alphabetical order)

Since his introduction to American cinema in the highly acclaimed MAMBO KINGS, ANTONIO BANDERAS (Greg) is irrefutably one of the leading international actors of his generation. He has received critical praise for his performances in film, television and theater, as well as behind the scenes as a feature film director. In 2005, he was honored with a Star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

His second directorial feature is the Spanish film EL CAMINO DE LOS INGLESES (titled SUMMER RAIN in the U.S.). A coming of age story, the film follows the first loves, lusts and obsessions of friends on vacation at the end of the 1970s. He made his directorial debut with CRAZY IN ALABAMA starring his wife Melanie Griffith.

Banderas stole the show in the 2004 blockbuster animated film SHREK 2 as the voice of “Puss in Boots.” He reprised this role in the widely anticipated sequel SHREK THE THIRD, the ABC Christmas special Shrek The Halls, and will also lend his voice to the fourth installment of the franchise, SHREK FOREVER AFTER, this summer.

In addition to YOU WILL MEET A TALL DARK STRANGER, he also stars in the action thriller THE BIG BANG, directed by Tony Krantz, and will appear alongside Channing Tatum and Ewan McGregor in Steven Soderbergh's KNOCKOUT for Lionsgate. He recently starred with Laura Linney and Liam Neeson in THE OTHER MAN, directed by Richard Eyre.

In 2003, Banderas earned a Tony nomination for Best Actor in a Musical for his Broadway debut in the Roundabout Theater Company production of “Nine,” a musical inspired by Fellini’s 8 ½. He also received a Best Actor Drama Desk Award, Outer Critics Circle Award, Drama League Award and Theatre World Award. “Nine,” which was directed by David Leveaux, also starred Chita Rivera.

Banderas has worked with some of Hollywood’s best directors and leading actors including Robert Rodriguez’s DESPERADO opposite Salma Hayek and the sequel ONCE UPON A TIME IN MEXICO opposite Johnny Depp; ORIGINAL SIN opposite Angelina Jolie; Alan Parker’s EVITA opposite Madonna, in which he received his first Best Actor Golden Globe nomination; Martin Campbell’s THE MASK OF ZORRO opposite Catherine Zeta-Jones, in which he received his second Best Actor Golden Globe nomination, and the sequel THE LEGEND OF ZORRO; Neil Jordan’s INTERVIEW WITH A VAMPIRE with Tom Cruise and Brad Pitt; Jonathan Demme’s PHILADELPHIA opposite Tom Hanks and Denzel Washington; Bille August’s HOUSE OF THE SPIRITS with Meryl Streep and Glenn Close; and Brian de Palma’s FEMME FATALE.

When he left Antena 3, he had the opportunity to start working on the production side. At that time MEDIAPRO was creating their Film Production Division. After almost 8 years with the company, MEDIAPRO has already produced 30 films. They always work with the best filmmakers, either internationally, such as Oliver Stone (COMANDANTE) or Jean Jacques Annaud, or locally, such as Fernando León de Aranoa (MONDAYS IN THE SUN, PRINCESAS, the upcoming AMADOR), Isabel Coixet (THE SECRET LIFE OF WORDS, MAP OF THE SOUNDS OF TOKYO – Cannes 2009 Official Selection in Competition) and Javier Fesser (CAMINO). He has served as either Executive Producer or Associate Producer on all of these films.

She joined Antena 3 TV in 2004 as Director of Acquisitions and became General Manager of Antena 3 Films in 2009. Since then she has been involved in the production of such films as PAJAROS DE PAPEL (aka PAPER BIRDS), QUE SE MUERAN LOS FEOS, LOPE, LOS OJOS DE JULIA, 3 METROS SOBRE EL CIELO, INTRUSOS, and RETRASADO. She has also worked on the TV movies UN BURKA POR AMOR, LA PIEL AZUL, EL GORDO, NO SOY COMO TU, SOFIA, LAS MARAS, LA PRINCESA DE EBOLI, and RAPHAEL.

Gamero also produced BRAIN DRAIN and ROAD TO SANTIAGO, executive produced PLANET 51, and served as associate producer on SOUTH FROM GRANADA, BOX 57, YOU SHOULDN'T BE HERE, and DON'T TEMPT ME, which featured YOU WILL MEET A TALL DARK STRANGER star Gemma Jones.

VILMOS SZIGMOND ASC (Director of Photography) was born and raised in Szeged, Hungary, a small town whose main industry was a rope factory. He was barely in his teens when World War II ended, and the Russian government and army established a communist regime which cut off all contact with the Western world. Zsigmond developed a keen interest in still photography when he was 17 years old while reading "The Art of Light," a book filled with photographs taken by Eugene Dulovits.

Communist authorities initially denied him the privilege of continuing his education, because his parents were bourgeois. Instead, Zsigmond was put to work in the rope factory. He saved money to purchase a camera and became a self-taught still photographer. Zsigmond organized a camera club at the factory where he taught his fellow workers how to take pictures. He was rewarded by being allowed to study cinematography at the Academy for Theater and Film Art in Budapest. The idea was that he would come back to the factory and teach his fellows how to make home movies. On October 23, 1956, shortly after Zsigmond graduated from the Academy, there was a spontaneous public uprising against the communist regime. Zsigmond and Laszlo Kovacs, ASC, who was still a student, borrowed a motion picture camera and recorded thousands of feet of 35mm black-and-white film documenting the slaughter of brave civilians fighting Russian tanks and soldiers on the streets of Budapest.

After the rebellion was crushed, Zsigmond and Kovacs carried the film out of the country during a perilous journey across the border into Austria. They wanted the world to see what happened. Zsigmond and Kovacs migrated to the United States as political refugees with a dream of becoming Hollywood cinematographers in February, 1957. They didn't speak a word of English, and had no connections in the film industry. Zsigmond supported himself by working at odd jobs and spending weekends and evenings shooting 16 mm educational and student films.

He found a niche in the TV commercial industry, and also began shooting low-budget features aimed at drive-in theaters during the mid-late 1960s. In 1971, Robert Altman asked Zsigmond to shoot McCabe & Mrs. Miller. That was his entry into mainstream Hollywood.

Zsigmond has compiled some 80 narrative film credits during his storied career. He received The British Academy Award (BAFTA) for THE DEER HUNTER, and the American Academy Award for CLOSE ENCOUNTERS OF THE THIRD KIND and has had many nominations both in the United States and internationally for his body of work. When he earned the Oscar® for innovative cinematography on CLOSE ENCOUNTERS OF THE THIRD KIND in 1977, he dedicated that award to his mentors at the film school in Hungary during a memorable acceptance speech that was seen on television by millions of people around the world. There were other Academy Award nominations for THE DEER HUNTER in 1978, THE RIVER in 1984 and THE BLACK DAHLIA in 2006. Zsigmond also won an Emmy Award for the television film Stalin in 1992 and another nomination for THE MISTS OF AVALON in 2001.

In 2005, Zsigmond and Kovacs were among the first four recipients of The Legends Award from the Hungarian Society of Cinematographers. The award is a tribute to cinematographers whose lives and film are an inspiration to other filmmakers around the world. Zsigmond just recently returned from his alma mater in Budapest where he mentored film students in a master class. He and Kovacs helped to create the concept for the semi-annual summer master class in 1994. Zsigmond is and has been a regular participant in master classes all over the world.

Zsigmond is now completing shooting on BOLDEN to be released with LOUIS, a pair of films he has photographed for director Dan Pritzker that are a cinematic tribute to a pioneer of the early history of American jazz in BOLDEN and his subsequent influence on the great Louis Armstrong in the silent movie LOUIS.

There have been many other tributes, including Lifetime Achievement Awards from the CamerImage International Festival of the Art of Cinematography in 1997 and the American Society of Cinematographers in 1999. His body of work includes many other now classic films, including Blow OUT, DELIVERANCE, THE LONG GOODBYE, THE SUGARLAND EXPRESS, CINDERELLA LIBERTY, THE ROSE, HEAVEN'S GATE, THE WITCHES OF EASTWICK, SLIVER, and two previous films with Woody Allen; MELIND AND MELINDA and CASSANDRA'S DREAM.

At that time, she went to work as a secretary to Marion Dougherty who was opening a motion picture casting office in New York. In 1973, when Marion Dougherty left casting to produce films, Taylor ran Marion Dougherty Associates until 1977, when she became Director of East Coast Casting for Paramount Pictures. She left that position in 1978 to cast motion pictures independently.
