NASA TO HOST SPECIAL SCREENING OF DUNCAN JONES' MOON MARCH 16TH

MOON TO HAVE REGIONAL PREMIERE AT SXSW ON MARCH 14TH

Director Duncan Jones' thrilling feature debut MOON, starring Sam Rockwell will be screening March 16th at NASA following its regional premiere at South by Southwest on March 14th. Duncan Jones will be on hand for Q&As at both screenings.

MOON is a refreshingly philosophical and ultimately touching indie reflection on a genre that too often loses sight of character and story amid the wizardry of its special effects. MOON is told in the classic filmmaking tradition of 2001: A Space Odyssey.

Set in the near future, MOON stars Sam Rockwell (Iron Man 2, Frost/Nixon, Confessions of a Dangerous Mind) as Sam Bell, an astronaut assigned by Lunar Industries to a three-year mission mining Helium 3 on the moon, the earth's new energy source. As his contract comes to an end and Sam's health starts to deteriorate, painful headaches, hallucinations and a lack of focus lead to an almost fatal accident. While recuperating, Sam meets a younger, angrier version of himself, who claims to be there to fulfill the same three- year contract Sam started all those years ago.

The directorial feature debut from Duncan Jones, MOON also includes the voice of Kevin Spacey (21, American Beauty) as "Gerty," the lunar base's mysterious robot, whose mission is to keep Sam Bell occupied and on task.

MOON will be released by on June 12, 2009, a month prior to the 40th anniversary of the historic man landing on the moon on July 20, 1969.
